Travel documents

Check with your country's immigration authorities whether your passport suffices to visit Mexico, or whether you must apply for a visa.

Travel Insurance:

This is an essential requirement to travel abroad, so please remember that our Assist Card offers insurance that covers:

- Medical assistance
- Transfers
- Legal assistance

Climate (between 75° and 85° F)

Cancun's temperature hovers between 75° and 85° F throughout the year, although the temperature drops significantly during the rainy season from June to October, and the chance of tropical storms and hurricanes increases.

The best weather is from November to May, but optimal travel happens between December and April, as the average temperature is 84° F and rains are infrequent.

Drinking water:

Is it safe to drink tap water?

Do not drink from the tap. To avoid getting sick on vacation, use filtered bottled water.

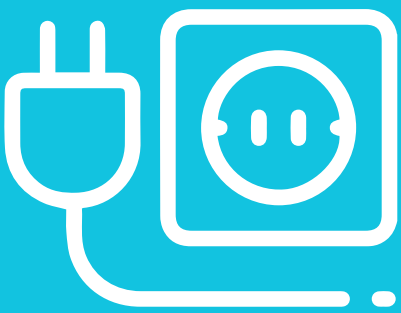

Currency:

Mexican peso is the nation's currency.

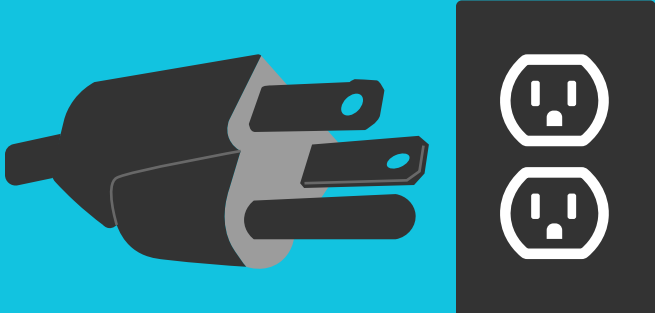

The US dollar is accepted in many places. Credit cards are accepted for most transactions, but it is important to carry cash for certain purchases.

Sargassum

derived from a natural phenomenon that comes from the seas of Africa, is a brown macroalgae that floats on the surface of the ocean and generates foul-smelling gasses when decomposing on the shores.

Standard voltage: 127 V
Standard frequency: 60 Hz

Traditional dishes of the region

"Tikin Xic" fish platter

Salbutes

Cochinita Pibil

When visiting this beautiful Caribbean city, don't forget to savor Cancun's traditional fare. Marked by a strong Mayan influence and its trademark spices, these delicacies burst with a combination of flavors that will astound your palate.

"Tikin Xic" fish platter

Its name is derived from Mayan, where Tikin means "something dry" and Xic refers to a wing or a fin, alluding to the cut of the fish.

The primary ingredient is a whole grouper, which is white and firm, then it is cut in half and spread out, marinated with achiote spice (very traditional in Yucatec cuisine for various stews), sour orange juice, in addition to another mixture of spices and aromatic ingredients. The fish is placed on a bed of banana leaves, then roasted in a wood-fired oven. Quite the delicacy!

Salbutes

From the Mayan Sáal, meaning "light," and Buth, meaning "stuffed," which is to say, "lightly stuffed."

This appetizer is made with a corn dough tortilla, about 3 inches in diameter, then it is lightly cooked on the stove and fried in oil to make it fluffy, crispy, and soft. A thin slice of tomato, cabbage, cured onion, along with chicken, turkey, venison, or pork are placed on top of each puffed tortilla.

These meats are usually prepared in a red marinade. A must-try!

Cochinita Pibil

Dish prepared with suckling pig or pork meat seasoned with red achiote spice, diluted in sour orange juice with additional spices such as cumin and Tabasco pepper, then wrapped in banana leaves. The meat is famously cooked in an underground pit oven.

Generally, the meat is served shredded to be eaten in tacos with corn tortillas, accompanied with pickled purple onions and habanero peppers.

¡El platillo más emblemático de la Península de Yucatán!

TRADITIONAL REGIONAL DRINKS

The two quintessential Mexican beverages are, without a doubt, tequila and mezcal. Both come from the fermentation and distillation of agave, an aloe-like plant that varies from one drink to another.

Xtabentun

A honey liqueur of Maya origin, produced in the state of Yucatan from honey bees fed on the xtabentun flower, which has organoleptic characteristics similar to anise.

It is customary to serve it alone, with ice or simply cold.

White Russian

It's ingredients also include Kahlua and ice cubes, but the ingredient that distinguishes it from the Black Russian is milk.

Margarita

The perfect balance of white tequila, lime juice, and orange liqueur with a little salt rimming the glass.

Michelada

Prepared with lime juice, Clamato, salt, hot sauce, Worcestershire sauce and beer. Everything is served in a glass rimmed with salt and chili.

Black Russian

A cocktail made with vodka, Kahlua and ice cubes.

Kahlua is a coffee-flavored liqueur that originates from the state of Veracruz.

Charro Negro

A cocktail made with tequila and Coke, served in chilled glasses rimmed with salt and lime juice, these last two are added as such inside the drink for a strangely good twist.

Paloma

This cocktail is made with tequila, grapefruit soda and lime. It is best served cold, in a frosty glass rimmed with salt.

Cancun is renowned for its shallow reefs with dazzling colors and extensive sea life. The gentle currents and some shipwrecks make diving in these waters unique.

Sea temperatures range between 25° to 28° C (77 to 82° F) in winter and 27 to 29° C (81 to 85° F) in summer. While the cenotes' temperature is lower, it remains constant at 24° C (75° F). Visibility ranges from 12 meters (40 feet) during the winter months to 27 meters (90 feet) in summer. Visibility in the cenotes and caverns reaches 50 meters (150 feet).

The best places to dive

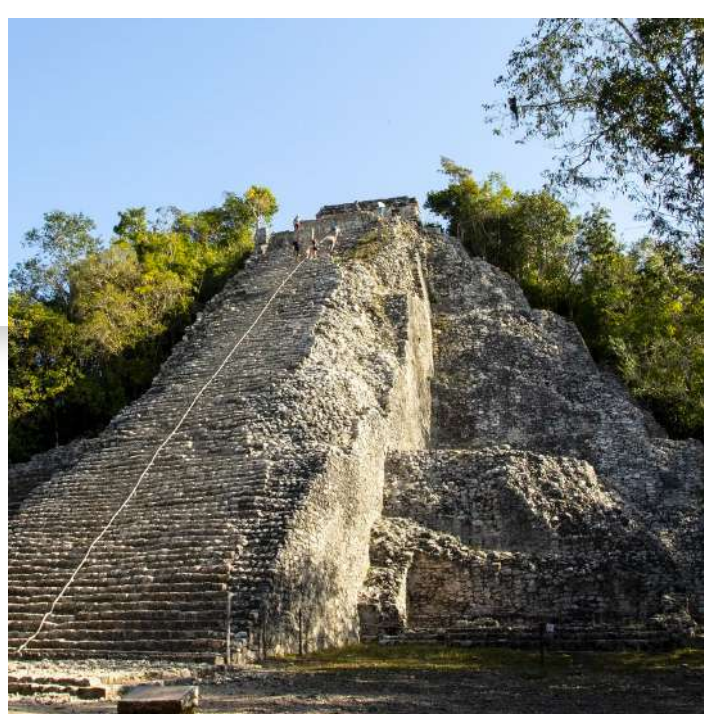

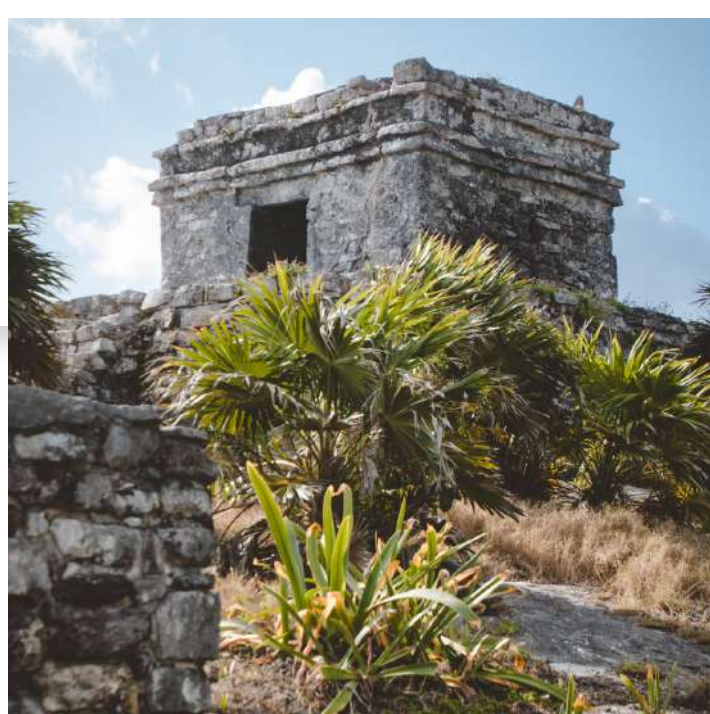

- MUSA Cancun's Underwater Museum of Art.
- Punta Cancun, one of the most popular destinations in the area with colorful coral formations, where it is easy to find manta rays, barracudas and sharks.
- Chitales, a shallow reef (10 meters / 35 feet) with great visibility, located near Punta Cancun, an ideal place for beginners to watch for lobster, rays and groupers, among others.
- C58 Minesweeper, a well-preserved World War II ship at a depth of 24 meters (80 feet).
- Punta Nizuc, an ideal place to snorkel and dive with a great diversity of marine life such as lobsters, groupers and manta rays, among others. The depth is about 10 meters (30 feet).
- Puerto Morelos National Reef Park, located just 100 meters (328 feet) from the beach.

Amid Cancun's many attractions, nothing beats the access to the fascinating vestiges of ancient Maya culture. Just a few hours away, you can visit important archaeological zones in the Mexican Caribbean any day of the week between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Some even provide guides who speak several languages.

- Chichén Itzá, world-renowned archaeological complex that includes the striking Pyramid of Kukulcan, giving insight into how the Maya civilization lived centuries ago.
- El Rey located at Kilometer 18 of Kukulcán Boulevard in the Hotel Zone. The site features 47 structures with unusual architecture in a religious and administrative area, where important ceremonies took place.
- San Miguelito, located at Kilometer 16.5 of the Hotel Zone. Access to the site is through the Maya Museum of Cancun.
- Yamil Lu'um, a single structure called Scorpion's Temple, scholars believe it to have functioned as an observatory, as it faces the sea. Located at Kilometer 12 of the Hotel Zone.
- El Meco, located at Kilometer 2.7 of the Puerto Juarez-Punta Sam Highway north of Cancun. The main structure known as El Castillo stands out as the tallest in the northern region of the state.
- Tulum, made up of more than 60 structures, the highlights include El Castillo, standing almost 27 feet and overlooking the sea, the Temple of the Descending God, and the Temple of the Frescoes.
- Cobá, enveloped deep in the green tropical jungle, this ancient Maya city rises between two lagoons. There are an estimated 6,500 structures in the area surrounded by thick jungle; in fact, only 5% of the site has been excavated. In its heyday, the site spanned over 18,000 acres.
- Muyil, one of the oldest cities located 20 minutes south of Tulum, next to the lagoon of the same name. The site has vast vegetation and three bases, in addition to the structure called El Castillo standing at 56 feet.

The Mexican Caribbean golf circuit is among the most competitive destinations on the planet, with the endorsement of international tournaments such as the PGA Tour at Mayakoba, the only PGA event outside the United States and Canada. The circuit has 15 fields in operation, seven in Cancun, seven along the Riviera Maya and one more in Cozumel.

All fields are open to the public, although it should be noted that some fields require prior reservation.

In the Mexican Caribbean, there are a series of natural wells of crystalline water that are fed by the filtration of rain and the largest underground river system in the world, the Great Mayan Aquifer.

The cenotes were known as “dzonot” by the Maya, who considered them sacred places because they believed they connected to the underworld (Xibalbá), where their gods and spirits reside after death. As you enter the magical world of these caves, the strange rock formations of stalagmites and stalactites will spellbind you.

The Cenotes Route: Around Puerto Morelos, there are a series of cenotes surrounded by a unique jungle landscape, becoming ideal places for adventure tourism.

The Route includes ecotourism parks and mystical cenotes such as Zapote, Siete Bocas, Kin Há, La Noria, Las Mojarras, Chilam Balam, Verde Lucero and Boca del Puma.
